FACTS

The net daily average circulation of The Times for the first four months of 1908 was 44,606 (in April a daily average of 45,519).

The net daily average circulation of The Star, the nearest competitor of The Times, for the first four months of 1908 was 38,128 (in April a daily average of 37,973).

The Times leads, therefore, by 6,478, or 17 per cent.

More copies of The Times go into Washington homes than of any other paper.

The Times outsells every other Washington paper in each of the four divisions of the city-Northwest, Northeast, Southeast, and Southwest-laken separately or together. The Times circulation in result-bringing quality to the advertiser leads all others. The cost of advertising in The Times, based on price per thousand circulation, is less than in any other Washington
